

STATISTICAL SAMPLING PROCESS

ABSTRACT

5 A method of sampling data includes gathering a first data sample during execution of a program, executing the program during a random inter-sample period and gathering a second data sample following the inter-sample period. The method may also include generating an inter-sample count and decrementing the inter-sample count to zero before gathering the second data sample.